In 1923 "Mr. Collingwood published a small manual providing a general sketch of Roman Britain. Now he has rewritten the work, bringing it abreast of developments in archaeological and historical research, considerably increasing its size and adding more illustrations. The result is practically a new book, although the scope, purpose and limitations of the first have been kept intact. It is still a book for the lay reader who does not want to be bothered by the details, the controversies and the technical discussions of the professional archaeologist and historian." N.Y. Times

The apt title tells the story—a book of youth, when everything is either very funny or very serious. The two authors went on their first trip to Europe in the '20's, when they themselves were not quite in their twenties. Here they tell of sightseeing and the people they meet and of the young and foolish things they did. A digest version appeared in "Cosmopolitan"

A report of a trip to postwar Europe, with notes on its politics, literature and art. The author writes of what he has seen—the friction between English and Americans in a devastated and weary England, the complicated political situation in Greece and he gives an intimate revelation of how people live and what they are thinking in all the cities he has visited

"Thoughtful, sobering profile of Europe as seen by the author-critic in 1945. Ever present is the feeling of disintegrating moral and spiritual values and the confused state of international relations." Cincinnati

1 England—Description and travel (W) 48-6764

First published 1926. The 1948 edition has been brought up to date and new material added to conform to post-war conditions

The book is made up of itineraries with minute directions as to distances, time, conditions for sight-seeing, hotels, restaurants, and everything most serviceable for those going to England

"This is such an efficient as well as entertaining book, completely revised to take in the new developments in post-war tourism, that it can be recommended to sophisticated and first-trippers as well. It even is a sort of ersatz trip for stay-at-homes, and an admirable bit of home-reading for lazy students of English history." Commonweal

1 England—Description and travel 34-27214

"As 'an enquiring traveller,' Priestley in the fall of 1933 went forth 'to look at the face of England,' and here he recaptures, in scene after scene what he saw in the England of cathedral and old manor house, in industrial England of blackened field and dreary, ugly town, and in postwar England of mass-production and cut prices. An honest, challenging report, full of conversations, the author's own reactions and his pithy, illuminating and sometimes enraged comment." N.Y. libraries

"This is a picture of the desolate reaches of Lucania [in Italy] to which the author, painter and political prisoner, was [banished in 1935] for three years. As a former doctor, Don Carlo earned the affection of the sick peasants whom he cared for. This is a picture of a lost land, victim of feudal carryovers. Here was the sameness of the days, the futile endurance, and at the close, the ban against Don Carlo's practising, which led the author to secret measures in order to help the people." Kirkus

"A delightful book in which the reader is led through both the familiar and the unfrequented parts of Rome. Mr. Lucas follows no definite itinerary, but his impressions are nicely related and link up the ancient city with the modern. Though it is in no ordinary sense a guide-book, the volume will serve admirably as an 'accompaniment of arm-chair reminiscence.' Sixteen illustrations in color by Harry Morley and thirty-six reproductions from photographs add to the attractiveness of the book." Bkl.

Impressions of pre-war Spain gathered during the author's leisurely visits during the last years of the old régime

"The book is of great importance because it will be always the record absorbed and illuminated at the last possible moment of a Spain lost now for ever. During those last years before the insane, fratricidal, destructive war, Lady Bone watched, listened, heard voices from the old tapestried past, and, loving the soil, the people, the dark-coloured beauty, set it all down with quiet and caring reticence. . . This is a book to read very slowly, for its sentences are rich with beauty and wisdom." Manchester guardian

I chose Denmark. Doubleday 1940 291p o.p. 1948 914.89

1 Denmark 2 National characteristics, Danish (W) 40-34292

Denmark, its democratic way of life and its culture, celebrated by a writer who married a Danish woman and who settled down to live and work in Denmark in 1937

"He appreciates its civilization and its simplicity, and he believes the Danish way of life will survive. It is a highly personal story, with many digressions, comparisons with life in Ireland and England, bits of autobiography, and anecdotes of his friends." Bkl.

2 Denmark—Economic conditions
(W) 37-7385

"The author does for Denmark what she has already done for Finland and Sweden: provides a modern guide to the country and an interpretation of its people and civilization. For the latter there is little but praise: 'Denmark, the oldest kingdom in the world, is also one of the wisest and happiest.' Attractive illustrations, bibliography of nine pages, and good index." [30-25261]

The author's account of her visit to Iceland "is worthy of attention for the pluck with which she adventured by herself into the unknown, and for the sociability which put her at once on terms of intimacy with the people. Her itinerary is clearly set out, and to assist those whom she may tempt to follow her example she has appended 'Hints for the Traveller' and a sketch map. The appeal of the book is wider in that she is interested in art as well as in travel." Times (London) lit. sup.

1 Yugoslavia—Description and travel 34-2193

The author tells of a visit to his native Yugoslavia after nineteen years' absence in America

"I know of no recent travel book that is so rich in the information that really counts; not descriptions of cathedrals, castles, and scenery, though there is enough of this, but conversations with the great and the little; analyses of the nature of literature, art, and the homely philosophy of the native; frank exposures of the pull and haul of predatory interests, graft, prejudice, cruelty, and all that goes on beneath the surface that ordinary tourists see—best of all studies of types of character that Europe still possesses and Americans can envy." "The author goes back to the scene of his . . . 'Land of the Silent People' [class 940.534] to observe what has happened to them since the war." American news of books

This personal report deals chiefly with Serbia, Bosnia, Yugoslavia and Montenegro

"His hearsay accounts of wartime history in Yugoslavia are frequently somewhat perverted in accordance with what one may call the party line. . . St. John's account of Yugoslavia to my mind is just as phony in its bias as that of a truly Fascist observer; truth can be warped from the left as well as from the right. Despite this, 'The Silent People Speak' is of immense interest, not only to me as a friend and admirer of Yugoslavia and its people regardless of political regimes but, I think, to anyone." N.Y. "At once an enlightening discussion, in a brilliant yet simple style, of the Chinese people, their character, mind, and ideals of life, and a penetrating survey of the Chinese woman's life, and of social and political, literary and artistic life in China. The author, an intellectual modern Chinese, ranges from past to present, appreciating and appraising both China's old culture and present dilemma." N.Y. libraries

"Miss Waln is a daughter of a Quaker family of Philadelphia who for generations have traded with a Chinese family of high rank, here called the House of Lin. During her early years Miss Waln developed a keen interest in Chinese things, collecting old maps, manuscripts and Chinese dictionaries. Then in 1920 she went to China and for two years lived as an adopted daughter in the home of the Lins, the House of Exile. She married an Englishman in the Chinese government service and has spent the years since then mainly in China, a sympathetic witness of the strife and struggles taking place there." Book rev. digest

A textual and pictorial report on present day India which the author perceives as an awakening giant, striving to throw off the shackles of a medieval feudalism, to develop modern industries, to educate its people. Interviews with prominent Indians as well as with the common people are recorded
"Again this author and photographer has given us a very fine graphic account of India as she saw it in 1946, 1947, and early 1948 while a correspondent for Life Magazine. Though she closes her book with the death of Gandhi she is more concerned with the people and how independence, that has brought about two antagonistic states, has affected their lives." Wis. bul.

Factual rather than interpretive, it has two major sections: a consecutive story of the history, arts, langauges, and religions of the country from 4000 B.C. to the present; and an exposition of the political, social, and economic structure of modern Iran
"Mr. Wilber's analysis of the people and their customs is critical but sympathetic. . . His book does a real service to an understanding of Iran because it includes in a single volume the materials which afford the key to appreciating the broad patterns of Iranian behavior." Annals Amer. acad.

Analyzed in Essay and general literature index

"The Arab of today in his own lands and in relation to the rest of the world is interpreted in a traveling record of the author's work for the British Ministry of information in Aden, Yemen, Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Transjordan, and Iraq. The author has been a student of Arabic and has visited the Middle East since the 1920's; she is sympathetic to Arab developments, particularly the rise of an Arab middle class, approves on the whole of British conduct and management in the Middle East, and is highly critical of any further growth in the Zionist colonization." 1 Africa, East—Description and travel 2 Nile river 37-27099

A reprint of a book first published 1937 by Viking

"The struggle of the Nile with man and nature as it carves its way to the sea, the civilization of the people inhabiting its banks, the type of country through which it goes, and its legends and history from early Egyptian times. In painting this wide panorama of scenes and events Ludwig attempts to show how they are affected by and in turn affect the personality and destiny of the river. A colorful story; very ambitious in scope." Bkl.

"Of high value to many kinds of people. It is not profound or learned; it does not break new ground; and the specialist will wish that it gave a more connected and accurate account of each topic. But it was not written for the specialist." Sat. rev. of lit.

A book of prose and pictures with text by John Steinbeck and photo-direction by Herbert Kline. Based upon the motion picture depicting and life of the people and the clash of medicine and magic in a remote Mexican village

"It is a moving, enlightening story, and in its elemental simplicity it shows us, too, the daily pattern of the people's lives . . . as it was photographed in a real village, among the people who really are the 'characters' we see, so the pictures are as vitally revealing as they are strong and beautiful." "With so large a proportion of legend in its pages, the volume has an advantage in not being held to too severe a test of historicity, for the legends, traditions and colorful aspects of local history are entertainingly related and have a certain substantiality, which beguiles the reader into accepting them at face value. . . Although composed in the form of a guidebook 'The Berkshire Hills' can be classed as a travel volume for leisurely reading." Springfield Republican

" 'Once upon a time stars fell on Alabama, changing the land's destiny,' so goes an old tradition, and here, after six years' intimate acquaintance, Carmer has chosen to write of Alabama as a 'strange country.' Into the narrative troop college professors, plantation owners and their charming wives, hill-billies, Negroes, conjure women, Cajans; lovely old homes are pictured, and lynchings; there are stories of the wicked two-toed alligator, and of Bre'r Rabbit, and legends and ballads gathered in the Red Hills and in the Black Belt. Events related are 'substantially' as they happened. Attractive drawings on colored background by C. L. Baldridge." N.Y libraries

First published 1931. Reissued 1949 with a new introduction

"This chronicle of the cross-country trek of the forty-niners is cast in the form of a diary of one party who made the trip from Independence, Missouri to the Sacramento valley from May to September, 1849. In his preface the author explains how first he prepared maps of the route, then read every available journal and diary, and finally from material thus collected wrote the diary. 'Every material fact is from some record . . . nothing is modern except the arrangement.' The volume contains many illustrations from contemporary cartoons and prints, eight maps, bibliography and index." Book rev. digest

"Taking the Rio Grande as a symbol of the Southwest the author has written an informal and romantic history of this region beginning with the civilization of the pueblo builders and bringing the story down to the present day. Illustrated with plates grouped at end of volume." Book rev. digest

"From every point of view it is a most interesting, entertaining and enjoyable book. Because of his fondness for the scene he makes his history a romance, but a romance on a grand scale, one that epitomizes the conquest of a continent." Boston Transcript

"This book intends to use the combined medium of words and pictures to interpret a city. It is not a guide book. A hundred different sights and aspects, important no doubt in themselves, remain excluded because they do not help—in my opinion—to tell the story I here wish to tell: the story of one of America's vital cities, its functioning and its people." Author's preface

"Both in text and photograph, this book on San Francisco opens the door to a real acquaintance with the West Coast metropolis. . . It is not a guide book, but something broader and more searching, executed with an understanding and affection which the photographer-author is able to pass on to the public." N.Y. Times

The author "with his wife and young cousin, left New York in June, 1933, in his famous thirty-two-foot ketch, the 'Svaap.' A near hurricane, a shipwreck on a jungle river, and the rescue of Robinson by the United States navy, when he was stricken with appendicitis, were highlights of the voyage; the account of the Humboldt current which carries a wealth of antarctic life up to the equator, is fascinating. Scientific work was done on the Guano islands and at the Galapagos. Vivid writing, refreshingly direct, modest, and nonsensational. Attractive chapter-head drawings by Dan West, the cousin, and eight photographs." Bkl.

1 Antarctic regions 20-1604

"A remarkably well-told account of Shackleton's attempt to cross Antarctica, 1914-1917. The description of the crushing of the ship Endurance, after drifting hundreds of miles is the story of unlimited courage, perseverance and hardship almost unbelievable." Cleveland

"The story is told simply, for the most part without much passion; but there is no need for that to hold our interest. This book, and many another like it, are written for the general reader." Times (London) lit. sup.

First published 1897

"A dictionary of famous people of all nations and all times [based on Chamber's Encyclopaedia]. The total number of persons treated is over ten thousand—not only 'the great names,' but many of the lower and lowest who are apt to occur in general reading. It gives all the essential biographical information on each name listed—furnishes ample references to biographies, autobiographies, criticism, etc. and gives the pronunciation of difficult or un-English names." 1 Biography (W)

Annual. First published 1940. Presents articles on the life and work of people in the news—in national and international affairs, the sciences, the arts, labor, and industry. Sources of information for the articles are newspapers, magazines, books, and, in most cases, the biographies themselves. The heading of each article includes the pronunciation of the name if it is unusual, date of birth, occupation, and address. Source references are given at the end of each article. Brief obituary notices, with a reference to the New York Times obituary, are given for persons whose biographies have previously appeared in Current Biography. . . Each yearbook contains an index by profession, a necrology, and a cumulated index which includes names in all previous yearbooks.

Dictionary of American biography, under the auspices of the American council of learned societies; ed. by Allen Johnson and Dumas Malone. Scribner 1928-44 22v $184 R920

1 U.S.—Biography (44-41895)

Originally published in 20 volumes and an index. In 1944, the first supplement edited by Harris E. Starr was published bringing the material up to December 31, 1935

"Planned on the lines of the English 'Dictionary of national biography' and so includes only persons no longer living. Scope includes noteworthy persons of all periods who lived in the territory that is now known as the United States, excluding British officers serving in America after the colonies declared their independence. Signed articles, bibliographies

"As compared with the other principal dictionaries in this field the 'D.A.B.' . . . is less inclusive than the 'National cyclopedia [of American biography]' which includes many more minor names, but [the 'D.A.B.'] has articles of more distinction . . . and much more bibliography." Mudge

1 Great Britain—Biography [36-29738]

The main work and first supplement [were] published in two editions, the original edition in sixty-six volumes, in 1885-1901, and a re-issue, 1908, on slightly thinner paper, compressed into twenty-two volumes. This reprint incorporates in the articles the corrections noted in the volume of Errata and is, to that extent, to be preferred to the original edition

"The most important reference work for English biography, containing signed articles by specialists, and excellent bibliographies. Articles are adequate, i.e. important names treated at great length, minor names more briefly, and are generally reliable and scholarly. Scope includes all noteworthy inhabitants of the British Isles and the Colonies, exclusive of living persons; includes noteworthy Americans of the colonial period. The first supplement [v 22] includes biographies of those omitted from the main part and of those who died before January 22, 1901." Mudge

"Contains, in all, biographies of almost 1300 authors, of both major and minor significance, who participated in the making of our literary history from the time of the first English settlement at Jamestown in 1607 to the close of the 19th century. No living authors are included." Preface

"Nearly every American who has written anything of value, from Jamestown to the close of the last century, is included. The major writers, of course, receive proportionately more space and attention and generally a photograph from the Frederich H. Meserve Collection. The minor writers are presented skillfully and with charm. At the end of each sketch are appended two bibliographies, labeled 'Principal Works' and 'About.' " Shores

"Most of the sketches are short, but there has been a general effort both to make a really lifelike presentation of these writers and to offer a sound, though brief, critical judgment of their work. The book is thus genuinely interesting. Its interest and value are especially marked in the case of authors who are not now so well known as are their greatest contemporaries. . . This is a monumental piece of work, which will be particularly useful for the reference library." N.Y. Times

This work "aims to provide a foundation-volume of authentic biographical information on the writers of this century, of all nation, whose books are familiar to readers of English. . . [It] supersedes two out-of-print preliminary volumes, 'Living Authors' (1931) and 'Authors Today and Yesterday' (1933)." Preface

This contains twice as many authors as the other two and each sketch has been rewritten. The combination of sprightliness and accuracy which appears as a result of four years' preparation—and such years—is a monument to its editors." Current reference bks.

First published 1939. Published monthly, cumulates quarterly. Index cumulates quarterly, semi-annually and annually. Each quarterly cumulation has a "Who was who," listing recent deaths

"Contains American and foreign names of current interest. Information usually includes: full name, pronunciation, place and date of birth and death, Who's who type of sketch and brief references to sources for further information. . . . The two services [this one and 'Current biography' entered above] show surprisingly little duplication. The 'Who's who in America service' for 1940 includes some 1670 names, the annual 1940 volume of 'Current biography' some 1010. Of these only slightly more than 200 are duplicates. Furthermore it must be remembered that since it is supplementary to 'Who's who in America,' its current service does not duplicate the material already available there altho it does add new facts to those sketches. Its biographies are usually concise and factual altho occasionally a longer writeup is given. 'Current biography' uses the same general style of popularly written biography made familiar in such works as 'Twentieth century authors' adding personal characteristics and descriptive detail to the factual outline." Sketches of Mark Twain, Henry James, James McNeill Whistler, James Blaine, Henry Adams, Sidney Lanier, Grover Cleveland, and Joseph Jefferson

"Each sketch leaves with the reader a distinct picture of a real and interesting personality. The narrow limits forbid full portraiture, and in focusing for unity and sharpness of outline, the biographer necessarily sacrifices something of the modifying effect of minor details; but, on the whole, breadth of view and truth of perspective are fairly well preserved." 1 Presidents—U.S. 33-32904

Analyzed in Essay and general literature index
"Although this book of American Presidents has been written for young readers, it will provide adults as well with an understanding glimpse of the thirty men who have been our chief magistrates during the past century and a half. Within the brief space of a few pages Miss Hathaway has succeeded in portraying the personality and in describing the problems and the achievements of each of her subjects. She has also included a concise biographical sketch of each President." Boston Transcript

1 Lee, Robert Edward, 1807-1870 2 Lee family 35-18228

"An account of one of the most famous families in American history; leaders in war and in government, its members had a wide influence on political and social life. To the two best-known, 'Light Horse Harry' and Robert E. Lee, the author has given rather brief treatment, devoting more space to the other members, and especially to Arthur Lee, who negotiated with various European nations at the time of the Revolution, and is now cleared of the suspicion of treachery." "Gossipy memoirs of the White House chief usher concerning the eight presidents he knew, their entertaining, their personal idiosyncrasies, and their relations with the White House staff. The publishers state that the book version is entirely distinct from the selections from the memoirs published serially in the 'Saturday Evening Post,' but the difference appears to be chiefly in the editing of the manuscript, which was left unfinished and unrevised. The two versions vary in details." Bkl.

"After sketching in with some interesting detail the childhood background both of Albert and Victoria the author traces the development of the Prince in his difficult position, his influence on the Queen's opinions and temper, and his growth in the esteem of her ministers." Book rev. digest

"Mr. Bolitho has succeeded in this volume in making a very dull man extremely interesting, for he shows quite clearly that what is known as Victorianism owed far more to Prince Albert than to the Queen. That, indeed, is the great achievement of the book, for had Victoria been left to herself there can be no shadow of doubt but she would have been an entirely different woman from what she became under the domination of her husband." Mr Greenslet has brought to his work delicacy and reticence, together with a skill in words that reproduces something of the charm of one who made refinement the end of all his labor. He tells just enough of the child's surroundings at Portsmouth, of the clerk and youthful editor in New York; he follows the man sympathetically thru his Boston years of prosperous toil and golden ease, to the honored close. Weigall, Arthur Edward Pearse Brome, 1880-1934. Alexander the Great. Putnam 1933 352p o.p. 1948 92
33-8960
"In this biography of Alexander the author takes as his starting point the thesis that most of Alexander's life, his character, his actions, good and bad, and his fame after death, are due to the fact that he was brought up to believe in his divine birth, that his mother believed it, and that his training and environment were largely colored by this belief." Book rev. digest
"His book is a rare combination of learning and literary skill, a contribution to history which scholars will welcome even if they do not at all points agree with it, and for others a colorful portrait unforgettable as an interpretation of character and a record of extraordinary achievement." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Allen, Ethan, 1737-1789
Pell, John. Ethan Allen. Houghton 1929 331p illus $5 92
29-23480
"Based upon careful original research, this chronicle of the picturesque leader of the Green Mountain Boys touches with humorous understanding upon all the strange angles of Allen's character and career. Bibliography, chronology, notes, index. Photographs from old woodcuts, prints, manuscripts etc. Maps on end pages." N.Y. libraries
"Mr. Pell has written a book that may not be the 'last word' on the subject but that will hold first place for a considerable time. A sympathetic interest in his hero we concede him at every step; but he is not blind to the angles in Allen's rugged character, nor does he try to conceal or condone them. He touches them with a dry humor." Springfield Republican

(W) A 41-2295
The life story of the commander whose campaigns with the Egyptian expeditionary force were decisive in the first World war. This volume deals with his military life and campaigns
"Apart from the special interest attaching to the work because of Wavell's authorship, this study of Allenby is worthy of reading for its original purpose, which has been achieved with a literary skill and absence of technical detail. Allenby's military undertakings are described expertly, but in such simple terms that the nonmilitary reader can follow the text without difficulty." Springfield Republican

Anderson, Sherwood, 1876-1941

Sherwood Anderson's memoirs. Harcourt 1942 507p o.p. 1948 92

1 Authors—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. (W) 42-11377

Tho written over a number of years, this unconventional autobiography was completed by the author's wife and Paul Rosenfeld. Mr Anderson states in his preface "I want to use my own life only as a kind of springboard. . . Some [notable men and women] may appear in the pages of my book and others may not . . . for, in my writing, I have always written of 'obscure' people. It is these who have given me life"

"Much of the material in this book will be familiar. It has been used in the author's earlier novels and stories. The style is also that of his fiction and the book is written with the same frankness. The lack of reserve in writing of his personal affairs will be offensive to some readers. . . It will be of most interest to those who have followed the literary trends of the past two or more decades." Wis. bul.

1 Rome—History—Republic, B.C. 510-30 31-28241

A companion book to the author's "Life and times of Cleopatra"

"Mr Weigall has written a history, not only of Marc Antony, but of the Rome of his times, a narrative which explains the political battles of that violent period and the parts played by the chief party leaders. The author treats Antony as a man grossly maligned by contemporary writers and concludes that if he had not been upset by his lover's quarrel with Cleopatra at the time of the battle of Actium 'he would in all probability have become the sole sovereign lord of the earth.' 1 Actors and actresses—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 2 Moving pictures (W) 40-27471

The second volume of reminiscences following the author's "Up the years from Bloomsbury." The author recounts "the routine of picture making, his subsequent holidays, his lack of adventures, and the people he knew—the Warner brothers, William Archer, Winthrop Ames, Darryl Zanuck, and the fellow actors and actresses." Kirkus

"George Arliss has enjoyed his ten years 'in pictures,' which no doubt has something to do with the enjoyment which this second section of his memoirs hands down to his readers. But the chief cause of this book's rich delight lies, of course, in the charm of the author's own mind—his keen and urbane wit, his humor that is both original and allusive, his shrewd thought and suave selective discursiveness." English edition has title: On the stage

"There is a modesty, kindliness and absence of manner in this simply and humorously told account of the experiences that went into the making of George Arliss as a character actor." Book. rev. digest

"It is cleverly written and has the somewhat uncommon characteristics of modesty, sanity, shrewdness, and an informing spirit of kindly humor. It is noteworthy also as the work of a man who has solved and is eager to explain the true secrets of professional success." Sat. rev. of lit.

Arnold, Benedict, 1741-1801

Sellers, Charles Coleman, 1903- Benedict Arnold, the proud warrior. Putnam 1930 303p illus o.p. 1948 92

30-7384

"An interpretative biography of the brilliant and notorious American leader and traitor, unbiased and based upon historically accurate facts concerning the man and his career. Mr Sellers does not try to whitewash the character of his subject, but maintains that Arnold's treason was due to his honest belief that the cause of American patriotism was too weak, and that Britain could offer him higher rank and good money for his service in the vocation that was Arnold's heart and soul: war." Book rev. digest

"If Mr. Sellers does not sustain the dramatic action uniformly throughout his work, it may be said that this is too much to expect. He is not at his best in those passages in which a style approaching direct narrative is used, as in his accounts of Arnold's military campaigns, although those campaigns were as indicative of the fire-eater's personality as some of the detached incidents on which the author splashes color with a liberal hand." Arnold, Matthew, 1822-1888

Trilling, Lionel, 1905- Matthew Arnold. Columbia univ. press 1949 465p front $5 92

(W) 49-8833

Reprint of a book first published 1939 by Norton

"The importance of the book is that it is a comprehensive study of the whole man. For Matthew Arnold was not primarily a literary critic; the clue to his enigma is that he was really a social critic. . . With learning, penetration, and common sense Mr Trilling analyzes Arnold's career from lyric poetry, through literary and political criticism, to the religious writings." Sat. rev. of lit.

"This biography of Audubon describes all sides of his life and activities as naturalist, artist, and woodsman, and shows his place in American history. Altho intended for young readers, it is of equal interest to adults." Book rev. digest

"Miss Rourke has done her work well. She has made a thorough examination of all available materials concerning her subject. But she gives to the reader not the processes but the results of her study. This she puts in the most attractive form. . . She has written a narrative which flows along like the rivers over which Audubon travelled, and is as full of life and color as the birds he painted." "First as sealer, then as first-class skipper, then as captain of Peary's vessel and also of Stefansson's later, Captain Robert A. Bartlett has a thrilling career to recall here. It is not exactly a vivid narrative that he gives us, but just a sincere, unembellished one is readable when one has had such a career as his. It is the story of a man who loves the sea and hardy adventure." Providence

"A fascinating and delightful book which will be welcomed by the reader who enjoys a really fine biography. The book gives us a living portrait with the Victorian age as a background; we see 'Dizzy' as an author, as a statesman, and as a man. Born a Jew, reared as a Christian, he retains the Jewish characteristics of determination of purpose, accepting or ignoring rebuffs and prejudices when so doing eventually means the accomplishment of his wishes. We see him, hear him, and live with him in these pages." Wis. bul.

"First full-length biography of the Chicopee Falls utopian and social reformer, based on the unpublished 'Life' by Mason Green, recently deciphered manuscripts of Bellamy's and information from the latter's widow, son and daughter. The picture emerges of a courteous but reserved recluse, living almost entirely on eggs, milk and whisky and (rather strangely) fond of playing war games with his young son. Half of book is devoted to 'Looking backward,' the perennially fascinating and seminal prophetic romance, though Bellamy's other literary work, notably the unfinished novels 'The Duke of Stockbridge' and 'Eliot Carson' (unpublished) receives due attention." "There were few men of real eminence in the last glittering decades of the Victorian era whom the author, son of the Archbishop of Canterbury and one of a well-known literary family, did not meet on terms of intimacy. They are all to be seen in this human 'peep show'—Gladstone and Queen Victoria, Tennyson, Browning, Swinburne, Oscar Wilde and the great ladies of the Victorian pageant, endowed by their memorist with a certain grandeur, yet treated with a sense of humor." Mr. Benson has his likes and dislikes which he does not disguise, but he is a good showman, and although he calls his show a peep-show, it is really a show on the grand scale. His fat ladies are prodigious, his living skeletons rattle, and his fun is all the fun of the fair." Saturday rev.

"Others may draw a clearer personal portrait of Mr. Brandeis than is given us by Mr. Lief, who has plainly preferred to let the Justice stand out through his actions and his words; others will doubtless characterize and evaluate the Justice with bolder and more penetrating strokes of the pen. It will be difficult, however, for anyone to give us a better understanding of the extraordinary extent of Justice Brandeis's activities and influence upon our national life." Nation

First published 1857

"In the whole of English biographical literature there is no book that can compare in widespread interest with the 'Life of Charlotte Brontë' by Mrs Gaskell. . . . As far as mere readers are concerned, it may indeed claim its hundreds as against the tens of intrinsically more important rivals. Mrs Gaskell was herself a popular novelist, who commanded a very wide audience. She brought to bear upon the biography of Charlotte Brontë all those literary gifts which had made the charm of her seven volumes of romance. And these gifts were employed upon a romance of real life, not less fascinating than anything which imagination could have furnished. . . . It is quite certain that Charlotte Brontë would not stand on so splendid a pedestal today but for the single-minded devotion of her accomplished biographer." Clement K. Shorter

"A well-rounded modern biography portraying Byron as a personality, against a carefully depicted social and geographical background." Chicago

"M. Maurois has worked out his technique to a new and right conclusion. The mass of material—the bewildering evidence and conflict of opinion and record—is shaped fact by fact, and cemented with concealed artifice, until at last emerges a coherent and beautifully proportioned portrait. But it is more than a portrait. It is an heroic painting filled with living figures set in a scene of so triumphant a romanticism that the book stands out as another sign of the revival of enthusiasm and belief." Spectator

Scudder, Townsend, 1900- Jane Welsh Carlyle. Macmillan 1939 406p illus $3.75 92

(W) 39-10975

"The narrative has the impelling momentum, the irresistible color, the arresting personalities of a novel. Yet all is faithful to the sources; the final picture, as well as the individual incident, shows remarkable fidelity to the bright and troubled life of Jane Carlyle. . . There are memorable portraits or miniatures of Jeffrey, De Quincey, Edward Irving, Leigh Hunt, Mazzini, Lord Houghton, Dickens, Fitzgerald, Tennyson." Sat. rev. of lit.

"To an authentic record Mr. Scudder has attempted to impart something of the liveliness and verisimilitude and 'atmosphere' which we associate with fiction. To this extent his technique resembles that of the novelist. He does not probe very profoundly and there are psychological aspects of the problem of the Carlyles upon which he does not touch at all. But if his portrait lacks depth of perspective, it has a generous breadth." Christian science monitor

"One expects a new biography of a famous historical figure either to present fresh material, the result of research, or to revise conventional interpretations of character in the light of the more modern psychology. Miss Anthony's study amply justifies itself on both counts. Furthermore, Miss Anthony portrays the Empress with a keen eye for dramatic moments, with a convincing effect of continuity, and with a respect refreshingly tempered by humorous perception. The humor is casual and dry and effortless." Nation

Coffin, Robert Peter Tristram, 1892-

Lost paradise; a boyhood on a Maine coast farm. Macmillan 1934 284p $1.98 92

34-35147

"Mr. Coffin's book stands pretty much in a class by itself. It has the superior qualities of virility and insight. . . It runs so true to detail, cuts so deep into outdoor nature, carries such a knowledge of farm economy that it cannot be anything short of autobiography. This, of course, was Mr. Coffin's family; this is the story of his boyhood; this was his father's farm. . . It is a deft and daring piece of work, only possible of accomplishment through the medium of genuine literary art." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Cohen, Morris Raphael, 1880-1947

A dreamer's journey; the autobiography of Morris Raphael Cohen. Beacon press 1949 318p illus $4 92

(W) 49-7881

From the poverty and terror of the Russian ghettos and from selling papers in the Bowery, Dr Cohen rose to eminence in the intellectual life of America as a teacher and philosopher

"Triumphant autobiography of a Jewish boy whose immigration from Russia to New York's teeming lower East Side and his subsequent struggle through college and law school is an admirable story of persistence and determination. A successful, philosophical intellectual, Dr. Cohen's life stresses his sincere search for truth and the perennial values." Cincinnati

Confucius, 551?-478 B.C.

Creel, Herrlee Glessner, 1905- Confucius, the man and the myth. Day 1949 363p map $5 92

1 Confucius and Confucianism 49-8440

"A brilliant re-examination of Confucius and Confucianism based on pre-Confucian books and those written within two centuries of his death. Rejecting traditional sources as unreliable, Prof. Creel has used his detailed knowledge of Chinese literature to furnish an authoritative study of Confucius and the later perversion of his philosophy to orthodox state Confucianism. Analysis of his sources brings the author to the conclusion that Confucius represents a 'forerunner of democracy.' Included is an illuminating discussion of the impact of Confucianism upon Occidental thought. A well-documented critical study presented to appeal to layman and scholar alike, it represents the most reliable work on the subject to date." Library journal

Personal record. Doubleday 1912 236p illus o.p. 1948 92

1 Authors — Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. [12-2743]

Joseph Conrad's autobiography is quite unlike any other that was ever written. Its discursiveness and its chronological chaos are hardly to be described. It is not less full of charm than the rest of his beautiful, cleanly modeled prose; it is richer than some of his work in humor. Above all, it compels us to see and feel things as an intensely recipient and richly gifted spirit has seen them. Condensed from Outlook [London]

Conrad, Jessie (George) d. 1936. Joseph Conrad and his circle. Dutton 1935 283p illus $5 92

Cortés, Hernando, 1485-1547

Madariaga, Salvador de, 1886- Hernán Cortés, conqueror of Mexico. Macmillan 1941 554p front maps $4 92

1 Mexico—History (W) 41-21811

The life of Cortés, which is also a history of the conquest. The author defends Cortés, showing him as courageous, shrewd, and actually less cruel than his contemporaries. Bibliography

"It takes courage to essay again the story of Hernán Cortés, for thrice before, at least, it has been greatly told. Cortés related it himself in sober and moving letters to his king. His soldier, Bernal Diaz, told it even better from the wealth of his memories at eighty-four. . . And Prescott told it in the great tradition of nineteenth-century history in a work much read and loved today, though in [a few] years it will be a century old. It is a pleasure to report that Salvador de Madariaga has produced a new version worthy of an honorable place alongside theirs." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

First published 1937 by Doubleday

"Into the writing of this definitive biography of the great woman scientist, Eve Curie has brought the skill of a trained writer, the research of a scientist, and the love of a daughter. She describes her mother's early years in which she surmounted all hardships to pursue the course she had chosen, then the tragic death of her husband, and finally her pressing on to new and greater heights of achievement, totally oblivious to fame, honour and health. The world knows the record of her career, but for the first time reads of her background and private life." Ontario library review

Golden yesterdays. Harper 1941 351p $3 92

1 Authors—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. (W) 41-22156

The author "tells of her early youth, school days, and the courtship of Lorin Deland. The most appealing part of the book covers the early married life of these delightful and talented young people, their warm-hearted charities, their friendships, and happy, informal social life." Library journal

"Written with beguiling simplicity and modesty, this is a portrait of a warm and lovable personality with whom the reader establishes the most intimate sort of relationship before the book is finished. . . It is the record primarily of a singularly happy marriage which the reader is privileged to share." Springfield Republican

Bennett, Joan (Frankau) George Eliot; her mind and her art. Macmillan 1948 202p $3 92

"This is essentially a critical study of the life and work of George Eliot. The first section of the book is biographical, describing her life up to the time of her association with Lewes; the second is concerned with an analysis of her novels." Book rev. digest

"It is in this matter of illustration and elucidation that Mrs. Bennett reveals her own particular skill; and I think it will be allowed that her work, although unpretentious in bulk, is a major piece of English literary criticism." Spectator

"In his account of George Eliot, Sir Leslie Stephen supplies an interesting specimen of that art of biographical criticism of which he must always remain an acknowledged master. . . He writes of George Eliot in no spirit of adulation. He is keenly alive to her defects. . . But his tribute to her intellectual power of observation and to the richness of her emotional nature is ample enough to satisfy all reasonable admirers of her achievements." Athenaeum

"Apart from the fact that Dr. Williams's biography of George Eliot contains several hitherto unpublished letters, the book would be impressive for its freshness and treatment alone, since the letters are, in the main, relatively unimportant. What really matters is that Dr. Williams concentrates on the crucial years of George Eliot's life, those years with George Lewes which formed also the period of her most fruitful writing, to the end that we have a finely judged and fully matured study." "Miss Drew's book is the first detailed chronological survey of all of [Eliot's] poems, omitting only the plays and the light verse. . . Miss Drew is aware both of his artistic and his moral ideas. Her poem-by-poem discussions consider the artistic 'design' or drift of his developing thought. She is as interested in 'the mythical vision' as in the mythical 'method,' the subjects of her first two chapters. She traces the stages of Eliot's satiric disgust, revulsion, fear, despair, doubt, belief." N.Y. Times

"A revised edition of a study which first appeared in 1935. Two chapters have been added, one on the Four Quartets and one on the plays." Book rev. digest

"This is a welcome re-publication of a book which has done more than any other to assess Eliot's place in English poetry . . . Mr. Matthiessen's book is not a detailed literary analysis. His emphasis is rather on the force of Eliot's language and ideas. As such it was of great importance in freeing the poetry from fashions and making it intelligible as experience." Commonweal

"This volume . . . is packed with that witty writing we associate with Mr. Hackett. It presents a colorful and fairly accurate narrative of the exploits of the king. . . In these pages, Francis I, the warrior, by no means always the successful warrior, shines out in all his superficial brilliance. . . There is brilliant and colorful writing in this book. Occasionally, however, it is marred by too great a striving for effect. . . Historical biography needs brilliance and color, but dignity also." Sat. rev. of lit.

"For all its pleasant glimpses of the West Indies and the Orient, and the lively chapters on their Chinese experiences, this book is to be read and enjoyed, not for what it says about foreign countries themselves, but as a moving picture of an American family, roaming over the face of the globe in more or less unconventional fashion and having a happy and high-spirited—though not always a comfortable or serene—time." "Among all the lives of Franklin, it is the longest and best informed. . . As compared with Bernard Fay's 'Franklin,' published in 1929, his book is sounder at many points but conspicuously lacking in general ideas. * Gandhi's autobiography: the story of my experiments with truth; tr. from the original in Gujarati by Mahadev Desai. Public affairs press 1948 640p front $5 92

Based on the 1941 edition issued in English by the Navajivan press and personally revised by Gandhi

This book reveals the basic forces and factors which moulded Gandhi's life. It describes his colorful childhood, his varied education, his singular career as a lawyer, his complex religious and intellectual development, his championship of the untouchables of his native land, and his epic fight for Indian independence

"Much of this autobiography was written during a prison term in 1922; the balance at intervals following; the whole stands as a retrospective interpretation and study of those facts of his life up to 1921." Kirkus

37-28596

A translation of selections from the nine-volume French edition of the Journal of the Goncourt brothers. The editor has also furnished a brief introduction and eighty pages of biographical notes on the men and women mentioned

"Where the brothers are really unrivaled is in their first-hand descriptions of the literary giants of the day. They met Hugo and Balzac; Flaubert, Daudet, Gauthier, Renan they knew well; Zola was their disciple. Deliberately they tried to set down for us the undiluted essence of each man's personality and talk." Sat. rev. of lit.

"An unsparing record of the Russian writer's home life from earliest childhood until his grandfather turned him out to shift for himself at eight. A picture of Russian peasant life at once charming and revolting and full of remarkable character sketches, notably the wonderful old grandmother, a snuff-taking, vodka-drinking saint, of whom he says, 'her influence connected all my impressions by a single thread and wove them into a pattern of many colors, and her love enriched me and built up the strength needful for a hard life.'" "Record of the author's childhood and youth in a home where the most austere Puritanism prevailed; of his father, a scientist of distinction, devoted first of all to the religious bringing up of his son. Tells of the development of the boy's individuality, and the final break between father and son, between the rigid religion of the past and the liberality of the present, which sacrificed neither the love of the father nor the respect of the son. Written with great charm, with delicacy of feeling, poetic insight, and not a little humor." Bkl.

Selections from Hawthorne's American, English and Italian notebooks, extracts from letters and notes for new stories

"With admirable selectiveness Mr. Arvin has managed to extract just those portions of the journals that are most revelatory of Hawthorne, most interesting in themselves and most valuable as a picture of the time . . . 'The Heart of Hawthorne's Journals' gives an extremely clear picture of this reticent and solitary American, a picture that, as a whole, is not without a quiet charm and certain serenity." N.Y. The author has made use of Hawthorne's works "to interpret his life, and has used his life to throw additional light upon his writing." Retail bookseller

"This brief critical biography maintains an admirable balance between narrative and comment and is a model of its kind. Mr. Van Doren, a poet here writing criticism, does full justice to Hawthorne, who was a poet writing fiction. He has weighted the findings of the most recent scholarship, as well as the older biographical and critical studies, and blended them into a beautifully written and fresh interpretation of Hawthorne and his work. The book is infused with poetic insight, and provides a moving and convincing picture of one of the greatest American writers." Commonweal

Published in England under title: Doctor's odyssey

"Personal history of the adventures of an American doctor whose chief work has been in health education and the eradication of disease. The first half of the book is devoted to his years of training, his work as a medical officer in the United States immigration service, and as director of public health in the Philippines. The second half records his work as a director of the International health division of the Rockefeller foundation." Book rev. digest

Of first importance as a history of a victory of which any member of the human race may take pride. It is also of the keenest interest as the personal record of a remarkable man who, for all his becoming modesty, appears from his own careful record to have been able to meet any situation, regardless of what kind of demands it might make upon his intelligence and his ability to get along with people." This collection of Hitler's speeches is a sequel to "Mein kampf." The editor has preserved "such speeches and such fragments as will enable the reader to have a complete picture of Hitler's doctrine and to follow his rise to power and the expansion of his domination over Europe. . . Each chapter is preceded by an explanatory comment . . . and . . . a running chronology of world events places each speech against its proper background." Foreword

"M. de Sales, with fine understanding, has explained the background of Hitler's spectacular rise and Europe's tragic fall as the story unfolds in Hitler's own torrid words. This background material is superbly presented and, moreover, is objective. It helps to put each Hitlerian utterance in its proper perspective, as does the running chronology of world events." Inge, William Ralph, 1860-

Vale. Longmans 1934 126p o.p 1948 92

"Dr. Inge's review of his life and works, which coincides with his departure from St. Paul's, gains added interest from his injunction, revealed in this book, that no memoir of him be published after his death. . . In this volume, so far as can be related by the chief person concerned, he tells of his childhood in Yorkshire, his days at Eton and Cambridge, the melancholy which assailed him as it assails so many of his intellectual peers, his teaching at Oxford, his parochial and decanal work in London, and above all those books which are his sure title to fame." Times (London) lit. sup.

Dr Inge "in a beautiful little volume . . . has written as it were a postscript to his works. . . In Vale we find his style at its best, graceful, vigorous, epigrammatic, rising at times, as in the concluding passage, to a simple and moving eloquence which is beyond art." Spectator

"The years since the author's 'Story of my life' was written pass in review in this new volume, with many a glance back into the earlier years as well. Miss Keller dwells upon her perplexities in finding a 'special niche' in life, upon pecuniary difficulties, her ventures in lecturing, in vaudeville and the movies, upon a love affair and her many friendships, upon her ways of contact with the world about her. The fortitude and unwavering faith here displayed arouse sympathy and admiration. Photographs, index." N.Y. libraries

Also obtainable in the Riverside literature series (Houghton 80c) and from Grosset $1.49

"The book is indeed unique. The story itself and the years of effort which have made its telling possible, the personality which it reveals, and the creation of that personality,—these are things which seem little short of miraculous. The narrative of a young woman who has been deaf and blind from infancy is written in a style which is not only idiomatic, but individual and rhythmical." Condensed from Atlantic bookshelf

"Memories of the eighteen years of married life the author had with D. H. Lawrence, beginning with the brief, intense courtship which took Frieda away from husband and children, and ending with Lawrence's death. The book contains also a number of unpublished letters written by Lawrence to his wife, her sister, and her mother, these last being the most important and numerous." Book rev. digest

"This book about D. H. Lawrence by his wife has the feeling of a postscript. It comes last, it is laconic and almost offhand and, like many postscripts, it turns out to contain the gist of the whole matter. . . We could do with much more of point and comment by Mrs. Lawrence. Her desire to be fair is unquestionable; her style has dignity and a completely aboveboard kind of directness. At times she singularly mingles trivial memories with important generalizations. * Sandburg, Carl, 1878- Abraham Lincoln . . . Harcourt 1926-39 6v illus $38 92

Contents: v 1-2 Prairie years; v3-6 War years

"Probably the finest re-creation of Lincoln, and undoubtedly the most sympathetic and profoundly beautiful." Chicago

"A vividly human portrait of Lincoln with a richly peopled background. And sometimes the background comes out of the frame. Nevertheless with a few new facts or incidents, and with no pretence of novelty of interpretation, he has drawn a picture that for vitality, realism, sympathy and discrimination, holds attention and commands respect." "An account of his personal life, especially of its springs of action as revealed and deepened by the ordeal of war." Subtitle

"The author has attempted not a mere biography, but what is more difficult, a progressive character study of one of the most complex figures of history. In dealing with motives, with the well-springs of thought and action, he has undertaken probably the most difficult kind of task in historical criticism. It is a pleasure to be able to state that he has discharged the task with quite conspicuous success." American hist. rev.

"It is because Senator Beveridge not merely stresses the importance of constitutional doctrines from the point of view of an able lawyer and an enlightened historian, but also supplies for them a rich interpretative setting that his accounts of Marshall's great cases are so impressive and so convincing. He combines, indeed, the broad, impersonal view of the historian with the penetration of an astute politician. 35-13790

"All the tragedy of Mary's life," says Zweig, "was packed in two years of her forty-four—the two years of her great passion for Bothwell. . . . The peculiar compression of the main happenings of her career into . . . one explosive surge of feeling dictates the form and rhythm of her biography." He therefore devotes more space to those two years than to her early life or to her imprisonment
"In this brilliant and searching study of a great historic figure and a fateful career he has surpassed himself, combining the solidity and keenness of historic investigation with the richness, mass, and disciplined tempo of a significant life story that is also literature." Nation

In the mill. Macmillan 1941 158p o.p. 1948 92
1 Poets—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. (W) 41-11600

Autobiographical account of the poet's two years in a Yonker's carpet mill during which he first discovered his taste for literature
"The book shows . . . a singularly lovable young man, eager for work, anxious to learn, one who always kept a friendly curiosity for other ways of life than his own, never disdained the interests and the pleasures of the common people, that great brotherhood to whom all poets must belong." "Dr Murdock states that he had a 'double purpose' in writing this volume, and that he 'tried not only to give a "life" of Mather' but to retell in some measure 'the story of his time in New England' as revealed in his character and activity. . . . The author, by availing himself of all the material hitherto used and some which has not been, has shed new light on many episodes in Mather's life. . . . Doctor Murdock presents the most favorable view that is possible of the Puritan régime." New republic

Matsumoto, Toru, 1913-
A brother is a stranger, by Toru Matsumoto and Marion Olive Lerrigo. Day 1946 318p $4 92
46-11958

"Toru Matsumoto is a Christian native-born Japanese whose childhood was made difficult by his mother's stern unyielding Christian principles and his father's traditional Japanese attitude. Matsumoto finally escaped the bitter family differences with the complicating factor of extreme poverty by coming to New York. He alienated his eldest brother by marrying the woman of his choice and lived as an enemy alien in America during the war. An extremely sane and interesting record of the kind of life open to a Japanese rebelling against Japanese tradition and custom." Ontario library review

Matthews, Herbert Lionel, 1900-
* Education of a correspondent. Harcourt 1946 550p $4 92
1 Journalists—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 2 World politics (W) 46-25183

The author describes, in this "autobiographical story, the impact of three wars —Abyssinia, Spain, and the world conflict—upon his thought and feelings." Huntting
He "went to Europe in 1922 as correspondent for the New York Times. In Italy he found himself in sympathy with Mussolini in his aggressive war against Ethiopia. In Spain he reversed himself, became an ardent Loyalist and hater of Fascism, and has so remained. This autobiography takes him through the war, with an extensive section devoted to India. The final summary states his attitude toward Communism, of which he is more tolerant than of the other form of totalitarianism." Wis. bul.

The summing up. Doubleday 1938 310p $2.75 92
1 Authors—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 38-27219

"This is not, as the author points out, either an autobiography or a book of recollections; it is, rather the matured conclusions on writing, art, and life which a great writer and a distinguished man has reached in the course of a long, full, and busy life." Huntting
"Almost bare of personalities except for the central figure around whom it is written. But around that figure there clusters a wealth of allusion, anecdote, confession, and experience sufficient to form a portrait of man and artist as complete and absorbing as any that our own day has given us." A portrait of Sir Hiram Stevens Maxim, inventor, engineer, and eccentric personality
"Sir Hiram was the most fascinating kind of father, always unexpected and original in his reactions to events. The son writes without any pretense toward literature, but is so natural and forthright in his telling of the very good stories he has to tell, that the reader is won completely and finishes the book—it is not a long one—in short order, wishing for more." Harding, Bertita (Leonarz) 1907- Phantom crown; the story of Maximilian & Carlota of Mexico. Bobbs 1934 381p illus o.p. 1948 92
1 Charlotte, empress consort of Maximilian, emperor of Mexico, 1840-1927 2 Mexico—History 34-35130
"A dramatically written, vivid chronicle of Napoleon III's attempt to rule Mexico thru the agency of the Austrian archduke, Maximilian. The first two sections of the book deal with Maximilian's early life and his marriage with Carlota, and with Napoleon's political plottings which sent them to Mexico. The bulk of the book tells the story of their brief and disastrous reign, of Maximilian's fall and death, and of Carlota's return to Europe." Book rev. digest
"Mrs. Harding in retelling the story of the Mexican misadventure has done admirable work. Her exceptionally astute insight into character and motive has enabled her to present Maximilian and Carlota as real personages. . . . She succeeds also, by means of carefully selected and very illuminating details, in picturing the social background of mid-nineteenth century Mexico with an authenticity that is impressive." "My book is a study in the evolution of a character, William Lamb, Lord Melbourne's. . . I trace his story . . . until the age of forty-seven, just before the opening of his active career as a public man." Preface
"Lord David Cecil does not stoop to conquer the reader by magnifying the scandalous details of Lady Caroline's conduct. He tells them intimately and impartially, but what finally interests him is the fascinating character of Melbourne . . . 'Young Melbourne' is one of those sufficiently rare biographies which reach a high level both as art and as straight entertainment." Sat. rev. of lit.

"The sixty extant journals of John Muir were written over a period of forty-four years, from 1867 to 1911. Closely allied with them is a mass of notes scribbled upon loose sheets and bits of paper of all shapes and sizes. The journals cover nearly the whole of his career as a naturalist, narrating his wanderings, describing what he saw, recording his scientific researches." Introduction

‡ Story of my boyhood and youth. Houghton 1913 293p illus $3 92

1 Frontier and pioneer life 13-5573

A notable piece of autobiographic writing—the story of an unusually interesting boyhood and youth told with an energy and an eye for the diverting and significant that distinguish it at once from the slipshod garrulity of most books of the kind. The first fifty pages are devoted to the author's boyhood in Dunbar, beside the North sea. At the age of eleven he accompanied his family to Wisconsin, and the chapters that form the bulk of the volume describe the joys of those early days in a new land. Condensed from Nation

"The most brilliant exposition of the Napoleonic legend should rightfully be noteworthy and popular. Such an attempt to enliven history is praiseworthy, and two factors have contributed to its success. The first is the author's style, perhaps the foremost example of the way the historical present should and should not be used—for it is the medium of the entire work. The second is the copious use of the words of Napoleon himself (often frankly imaginary) and of his contemporaries." American hist. rev.

It is not as witty as Mr. Guedalla's 'Second Empire,' but it is much meatier, more restrained, and it is much less allusive . . . he has so sifted and arranged his material that the reader is never confused, never halted by cross-references and cross-currents." This biography follows his career as a student in Toronto and Montreal and as a professor in McGill medical school, in the University of Pennsylvania, and in Johns Hopkins university. The [book also] is devoted to his work at Oxford, his activities during the World war, and his final illness. Osler's broad interests and the detail with which Dr Cushing writes make the work almost a history of medical science during the period." Pittsburgh

"The theme is noble, the book is worthy of its subject; there is little to criticize . . . the matter is all pure gold and the book should rank as one of the classical biographies." Nature

both America and Europe." Library journal

"The author is content to let Margaret Fuller's story tell itself without any intrusion of her own opinions or attempts to psychoanalyze her subject. To some extent, it is fictionized biography but it is very readable and gives as sympathetic a picture as we have had of this New England blue stocking who lived thru an Italian revolution." [Bibliography]" Library journal

"Sympathetic and well balanced account. Although Mr. Wade pursues a different method and disagrees with some of Miss Anthony's conclusions, his portrait of Margaret the woman, does not differ fundamentally from hers. He has, however, painted her with a wider sweep, with much revealing detail of her relation to all her backgrounds. . . This is a freshly conceived and vital picture of a fascinating and unique woman and the society in which she played a really great part." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

"The biography narrates an immense number of events—for Palmerston lived a long life, was Minister of War at twenty-six and died as Prime Minister at eighty. Moreover, 'the life of Palmerston was the life of England and, to a large extent, of Europe' in those years. Indeed, the book is so packed with information, drawn from all sorts of published and unpublished sources, that sometimes one loses perspective and the relative importance of events becomes obscured. . . 1 Great Britain—History—Stuarts, 1603-1714—Sources 2 Great Britain—Social life and customs A 48-18

The standard edition, first published in 1893-1899 in nine volumes (later divided into ten volumes)

"An intimate and frank narrative of a period of the writer's own life covering nine and a half years from January 1660 to May 1669." Pratt alcove

"No work of the kind in the world's literature can be compared to Pepys' 'Diary' . . . It paints the official and private circles in which the author moved, the course of public affairs, the humours of social life, with no less truth and frankness than it reveals the author himself. It is by far the most valuable document extant for the understanding of the times; better than all the histories and all the comedies"

"The author has had access to many hitherto unpublished letters, here given at length, and often in facsimile. . . Here . . . are all the important facts that have been ascertained—probably all the facts of any importance that can ever be ascertained—about one of America's first, most undoubted, and most fascinating geniuses." Book-of-the-month club news

"That romantic and enigmatic literary genius in a long, detailed yet never cumbersome biography. The career of Poe's parents in the theatre and the discovery of the forgeries of R. W. Griswold, Poe's first biographer, are two of several items here disclosed for the first time." Cincinnati

Chronologically arranged, selected to present the most significant interest of each period of Proust's life, addressed to artists, novelists, critics, publishers, noblemen, courtesans, his family, and family friends, these letters have the continuity of a journal or an autobiography written during a lifetime of intense social and literary activity

"Chosen, primarily, to provide readers of 'Remembrance of things past' with clues to the development of the personality and the creative process out of which the novel grew." Translator's preface

"The letters stylistically, have no relation to Proust's major work. Their appeal is to the serious student of his novel." Library journal

The autobiography of an eminent electrical scientist who came to America as a poor young Serbian immigrant

"I have never met so good and complete an account of the Americanization of an immigrant, and I have never read so plain a story of the growth of modern science told for those who have no knowledge of the subject. But it has in my eyes a merit far greater. The account of life in his native village as a herd boy is written with a simple and vivid style which approaches the highest literary art, and this simple and direct method, even in his most romantic outbursts of feeling, persists through the book." Published in England under title: My life and thought

First published in 1933. The present volume has been completely redesigned and reset; the translation has been partially revised; and a postscript has been added to bring Schweitzer's story up to date

"Autobiography of the Alsatian medical missionary who renounced the rewards of his great gifts as philosopher, theologian, organist and writer, to minister to the sick natives of Equatorial Africa, alternating his service there with trips to Europe to earn money thru lectures and organ recitals to carry on the work of his hospital at Lambarene." Book rev. digest

"Rarely does a man who writes an autobiography succeed in giving so much of himself as Schweitzer has here. "The Diary of Samuel Sewall, of which the present volume is an abridgement, was first published in three volumes by the Massachusetts Historical Society (1878-1882). It is the most intimate record now available of life in New England during the important period which it covers, and the genius of the author for self-revelation has frequently won him the compliment of a comparison with Samuel Pepys, his English contemporary. . . The Diary is valuable not only for its picture of public life between 1680 and 1730 but for its picture of the author himself in the privacy of his confessional." Editor's note
"There was need of an edition to make it more generally available, and this careful reprint of perhaps a quarter of the whole, retaining the dramatic and illuminating passages, is more than welcome. . . The great diary is still worth any one's time to read." Nation

Sheean, Vincent, 1899-

Between the thunder and the sun. Random house 1943 428p o.p. 1948 92

1 Europe—Politics—1914- 2 Journalists—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 3 World war, 1939-1945—Personal narratives (W) 43-51070

The author writes first of a summer music festival at Salzburg and of conversations with famous persons, family connections and friends of his wife. He later comments in a more serious way on the mind and temper of the French people before the occupation of Paris, of the British during big air raids, of the Americans in 1940-41, and, finally, of the inhabitants of the Pacific islands along the clipper route

"It goes deeper than the earlier book in its more mature awareness of the significance of political events and in its evaluation of people." Bkl.

* Personal history; with an introduction by the author. Modern lib. 436p illus $1.25 92

1 Journalists—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 40-27103

First published 1935 by Doubleday. Published in England under title: In search of history

"This brilliant member of the post-war generation of newspaper correspondents has had an adventurous career. It led him into most European countries and into Morocco during the Riff war, of which his account is exceptional. He was in China during days of Communist activities, in Russia, and in Palestine, and he presents an enthralling personal narrative, thoughtful and finely written." Cincinnati

Sheerin, Maria Ward Skelton (Williams)

Parson takes a wife. Macmillan 1948 204p illus $2.50 92

(W) 48-9077

"The record of a happy marriage . . . [told by] Mrs Sheerin [who] is an Episcopal minister's wife. . . Their duties took them from Virginia to Waco, Texas, to Chattanooga, Tenn., to New York, and finally to Washington; and rectory after rectory was turned into home for the Sheerin family, thanks to Yankee wit and Southern ingenuity." Christian science monitor

"Many well written anecdotes. Picture of a happy family (where all have a saving sense of humor) well integrated personalities, and a gratifying way of life. Certainly there is no stuffiness in the Sheerin rectory or study! Recommended, but probably of limited appeal." Library journal

Blunden, Edmund Charles, 1896- Shelley; a life story. Viking 1947 388p $3.75 92

(W) 47-30070

Edmund Blunden brings sympathy and knowledge to the writing of a new life of Shelley, using new facts brought to light since 1940. He tells the life story, in all its strangeness, in circumstantial detail, and he gives us portraits of the men and especially the women who played a part in Shelley's swift career

"It is the great French book on Shelley. His life, looked upon as matter for a novel, makes wonderful reading, and Maurois's style is enchanting. But I am afraid he has succumbed to the temptation of making Shelley even more eccentric and paradoxical than he really was." Nation

White, Newman Ivey, 1892- Portrait of Shelley. Knopf 1945 482, xxiii p front $5 92

(W) 45-2732

"This book is a condensation of my 'Shelley,' which appeared in two heavily documented volumes in 1940. . . The present volume achieves its condensation by the omission of notes, appendices, and the final, summary chapter, and by the condensation . . . of numerous incidents and episodes. No incident of general significance has been omitted. . . Many passages have been entirely rewritten." Preface

* Get thee behind me; my life as a preacher's son; illus. by Donald McKay. McGraw 1942 375p illus (Whittlesey house publications) $2.75 92

(W) 42-21323

The author of "One foot in heaven" writes this book with emphasis on himself rather than on his Methodist minister father. He describes the adventures, at home, school and play, of a boy growing up in various midwestern towns under what, to him, was the handicap of being a preacher's son
"A candid and continuously entertaining description of what life is like to youngsters reared in the shadow of the pulpit—told with the same light, anecdotal humor that the author used in 'One foot in heaven.'" Huntting

(W) 40-33661

The life of a Methodist minister who began his work in 1904 in a small town in Iowa is portrayed by his son
"He is able to view his father in the round, with no illusions as to his small foibles, with clear perception of how the elder Spence mellowed as the years went by, and with admiration, as his subtitle indicates, for the preacher's practical abilities. This reviewer doesn't recall any biography which gives so convincing a picture of the life lived by a small-town and city parson in our own times, and his reasons for living that kind of life." N.Y. Osbourne, Lloyd, 1868-1947. Intimate portrait of R. L. S. Scribner 1924 155p o.p. 1948 92

24-4068

"This short but delightful personal picture of Robert Louis Stevenson, done by his stepson, appeared in Scribner's magazine Nov. '23-Feb. '24. Covers his life from his 26th year when he first met Osbourne's mother until his early death at Vailima. The portrait brings out all the charm of Stevenson's imaginative mind, and gives a fresh understanding of his colossal literary achievement, the incredible product of a dauntless spirit continually hampered by a frail body." 1 U.S.—Politics and government—1865-1900 (W) 39-31244

An account of the successful career in law, finance, civic reform and politics of Samuel J. Tilden, prominent New York Democrat and party leader in the mid-nineteenth century

"He has had access to all the manuscript materials known to exist and he has profited by all the monographic studies made to date in the field. The man Tilden emerges from his pages to be better understood than he possibly could have been to his own generation. It cannot be said that he 'lives and breathes' again, for the biography is informative rather than creative. Only a few additions are made to the knowledge already available on Tilden, but the portrait of the man in his own times is better drawn and better set in its background." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

"This long autobiography has a definite historical value; and as a human document it is an arresting account of a man's rise to world power by way of revolution. Trotzky does not claim to be dispassionate. He sees no reason to hide either his sympathies or his antipathies. His vignettes of personalities are brilliantly drawn. The Stalin controversy, resulting in Trotsky's exile, is treated in detail. A tone of satisfaction over his accomplishments toward establishing the Soviet union runs throughout the book." Bkl.

An attempt at "something between a history of a period and an autobiography. The emphasis will be strongly on the former, for there will be little of my 'inner' self, less of my own work, and nothing (if I can help it) of my emotional maladjustments. . . In such an account as this I see myself not at all as hero nor deus ex machina nor even as the machine itself, but merely as the contact point which sets the mechanism going." Foreword by letter

"Once he has presented a rapid survey of his background and his youth, he devotes himself to discussion of persons he has known rather than to a record of his own life. . . Autobiography of a noted American journalist and champion of clean politics. He was the owner-editor of the "New York Evening post" for a number of years and of "The Nation" until 1935. His life story spans many interesting years and is full of important affairs, local, national and international

"No one who was in the thick of events during the days of McKinley, the first Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, has written a braver, finer story than Oswald Garrison Villard in this book, 'Fighting Years'. . . That part of Mr. Villard's autobiography which tells of our entrance into the [first] World War, the peace conference, and the winter of 1918 behind the lines of the Allies in Germany, is a story that has not been told so well before. Awarded the 1947 Pulitzer prize for biography
The life of William Allen White inevitably forms a chapter in American history, for he not only participated in the making of much of the history of his era, but was a keen observer of a great deal more. Included are characterizations of leaders like Mark Hanna and Theodore Roosevelt, of lesser men like McKinley, of writers and editors, of the Progressives, of Harding, of the Versailles Peace Conference which Mr White attended, and of America in the throes of its greatest period of growth and change

"William IV has been called the 'forgotten king of England.' He was sixty-five when he came to the throne and his reign of seven years left little impress. Miss Thompson believes that he deserved more credit than historians and biographers have given him. She champions him as the patriot king, and shows his character and services against the background of his times—a period of English history which included the passage of the Reform bill." Book rev. digest

"It would be impossible to make a hero out of King William IV, but he emerges from Miss Thompson's study as a bluff engaging figure, with a sailor's vigour of language and a sailor's good humour. A critical study in which the author "includes an analysis of the novels, sufficient information about Wolfe's life (from personal acquaintance, in part) to identify autobiographical references, and a judgment as to Wolfe's place in American life and letters." Library journal

"In this book Herbert Muller states the case for Thomas Wolfe; and he states it well. . . Fully conscious of serious deficiencies in Wolfe, Muller will not accept the stand of critics who say that the writer's editor was his finest artistic tool, and he points out many examples to show that Wolfe was the important person in the making of the finished works which bore his name." "Some individuals are born subjects for biography; the irrepressible 'Town Crier' was one of them. His colorful personality, studiously built up for the public's eyes and ears, flashes again in this portrait by a fellow Hamiltonian. The grossness, devastating wit and exhibitionism of the 'Gila Monster' (as Harold Ross called him) are shown along with his sentimentalism, generosity and fighting heart to give a balanced picture of a complicated human who seemed to have as many friends as enemies." "This is as much the biography of a business as of a man. The man shaped the business; the business formed the man. Both were controlled and developed by the vast and colorful expansion of the United States during the eventful decades following the Civil War. . . This is [Woolworth's] story—told largely in his own words." Author

"Contain all Dorothy's extant journals, as well as her accounts of tours in Scotland and on the Continent. The latter, being written up for publication, are sensibly less interesting than the Grasmere and Alfoxden journals; and they are much too long-winded. The journals contain the essence of her genius. . . One is glad to have it all at last, and to be given, besides, a rather sharper picture of Dorothy's pre-occupation with Coleridge than the old edition permitted to appear." New statesman and Nation

1 Virginia—Social life and customs

(W) 40-32286

A "humorous story of a Virginia family. It is ostensibly the story of their children, but actually a loving biography of the remarkable father as the daughter remembered him. . . It is the Virginia of the last generation, still poor, still aristocratic, but with all the modern problems nicely flavored by the past." Book-of-the-month club news

1 Augustus, emperor of Rome, B.C. 63-14 A.D. 2 History, Ancient 3 Rome—History—Empire, B.C. 30-476 A.D. (W) 47-12075

Picture of a colorful empire which at the time covered much of the known world. The period dealt with is that just preceding the birth of Christ, and just following, with the advent of Christianity marking an important turning point in the world-wide political structure. An understanding of parallel personages and events of that day is the product of this book

"This book is more than a history of the Roman world. It contains accounts of life among the wild Germanic tribes, of life in Persia, India and China, in Britain and in the Western Hemisphere. These, in addition to maps and charts, give the book an unusual inclusiveness." Book rev. digest

"Legend, drama, art, adventure—the swallow-songs of the Rhodian children, the life of Alexandria as shown in the papyri, the beginnings of the Christian church, the characters of men—all these belong to the story; and much more." Preface

"In his lack of pretentiousness, in the thoroughness of his penetration and in his suggestive syntheses he has provided an admirable introduction to the study of the three great cultures that are the background of our modern world." Times (London) lit. sup.

Myres, John Linton, 1869-

Dawn of history. Oxford 1911 256p (Home univ. lib) $1.50 930

1 History, Ancient [12-133]

"The book is short, and brilliantly written. . . Here the reader will find in outline all the information he requires about the dawn of civilization in the Eastern Mediterranean, and in the great valleys of the Nile, the Tigris, and the Euphrates. The later chapters deal with the earliest authentic history of Italy and Central and Northern Europe. It is a book which cannot be rated too highly." W. W. Davies's How to read history

Contents: v 1 The Orient and Greece (2d ed. 1930); v2 Rome (1927)

"Professor Rostovtzeff has always been more interested in the economic and social aspects of human life at various periods than in the narrative framework of history, and his generalizations on these topics always stimulate thought; he writes, too, of the history of art with intimate knowledge. . . The selection is excellent; we miss little that we could expect to find." Times (London) lit. sup.

Published on the foundation established in memory of Oliver Batey Cunningham of the class of 1917, Yale college

"For the reader who wants to see the streets of ancient Rome come to life before his very eyes, to know how the people lived, what and how they ate and how they earned the money to pay for it, how they amused themselves, what their social customs were, what their schools were like, what they thought about their gods and how they worshipped them, what the government required of them and did for them, and every other imaginable thing that the title covers—this is the book. It is the Rome of the second Christian century that is chiefly under consideration. Juvenal, Martial and the younger Pliny furnish much but by no means all of the data." Christian century

Tansill, Charles Callan, 1890-
America goes to war. Little 1938 731p $5 940.37

1 European war, 1914-1918—U.S. 2 U.S.—Foreign relations 3 U.S.—Neutrality (W) 38-8573

A study of the influences which caused America to enter the European war. Based upon the private papers of Bryan, House, Lansing and other officials who were in any way responsible for American foreign policy during the years 1914 to 1917, and upon German archives

"The Tansill book will not supplant Millis' historic 'Road to War,' if only for the reason that it is so much harder to read. But this new book will be a necessity in the library of every person commenting on war origins or American war policy. For documentary proof is the thing which most discussions of such subjects sadly lack. And Dr. Tansil has given the proof." Christian century

"General Pershing's 'Experiences' start with his appointment as commander of the American Expeditionary Force in May, 1917, and close with the celebration of the Armistice. The arrangement is strictly chronological. It consists of quotations from his wartime diary followed by amplified discussion written more than ten years later." Sat. rev. of lit.

"The story of his experiences is unique in our literature. It is told in simple, direct style by a soldier modest but unafraid. It is impersonal and temperate. It proclaims no official martyrs; and distributes few laurels, being limited by its title to the author's own experiences." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Combines in a remarkable manner accuracy of research and a philosophic understanding of principles and movements with a power of graphic narrative. His characters are not casual notes to the text, but real personalities, clearly realized and firmly drawn. He has taken a century of English history, and, without overloading his book with detail, has contrived to give us the period in a series of dramatic pictures. Condensed from Spectator

Translated from the German by E. W. Dickes. Published in England under title: Germany's revolution of destruction
The author of this book was at one time a member of the Nazi party and president of the Danzig senate. Because he opposed some of Hitler's orders he was forced to resign, and later became an exile. This book contains a former party member's analysis of the Hitler regime, particularly in its foreign policies. In conclusion, the author asserts that Hitler does not aim at peace, or even at domination of eastern Europe, but at world domination
"One of the most illuminating and most exciting political works which the German emigration has produced so far. It gives precise, unwavering answers to the origin and development of the Nazi Party and the present and future plans of Hitler." Nation

No one would consult them for information upon matters in which Carlyle was not interested, such as the financial collapse which occasioned the Revolution or the social and civil institutions which grew out of it. Nevertheless, so eminent an authority as Professor Aulard regards Carlyle's work as good history. He believes that Carlyle was a true interpreter who discerned in the common people the real hero of the epic struggle. He adds that he was as well documented as the best informed of French writers in that time when the archives were still closed. . . Such annotated editions as those of Rose and Fletcher are useful because Carlyle's individual statements often require the correction of later knowledge." Guide to hist. lit.

"This history, written in a manner suggestive of Lytton Strachey and with an irony equal to his, covers a longer period than the title implies, since in following the involved fortunes of the Bonaparte family and in setting the stage for the history of France in the Second empire the historian is obliged to go back to the beginning of the nineteenth century. The book is also a personal narrative of Napoleon III from his birth in 1808, and follows his career as prince, president and emperor. The history is introduced by a study of Bonapartism and the growth of the Napoleonic legend." Book rev. digest

"Dr. Finer's book is a work of reference, and no student of modern Italy can fail to be grateful . . . for the thoroughness and accuracy of his account. . . The result is a singularly varied and illuminating contribution to political science. It is but rarely that a historian addresses himself so directly and so clearly to what is, after all, the central problem of history—the relationship between an outstanding man and the events in which he plays a part." Originally published in 3 volumes, 1929-33. Contents: v 1 Overthrow of Tzarism; v2 Attempted counter-revolution; v3 Triumph of the Soviets

"Now that we have read Trotsky's History of the Russian Revolution in its entirety, it is plainly a great book. It is more than a brilliantly written and well documented account of great events of which we might otherwise have always remained only vaguely aware. It is also a philosophic interpretation of these events by a man of first-class intellectual ability who himself played an important part in them." New statesman and Nation

An "account of the starvation, civil war, mutiny, and chaos among the billion people of Asia. Mr. Isaacs . . . visited most of the troubled areas of the Far East after the collapse of Japan. He reports that old rivalries for power have merely been supplanted by new ones, that it is almost impossible to find a spot on the continent of Asia free from the sound of gunfire, and that conditions there seem likely to lead to the start of a war that could spread over the rest of the world." "A critical liberal's view of Asia. Lauterbach draws a gloomy picture of our occupations of Japan and Korea which have resulted, he says, in suppression and punishment of democratic forces in the campaign against communism. He regrets the graft and corruption which he believes exists in the Chiang Kai-shek regime in China, and is dismayed at loss of American prestige in the Far East because of what he interprets as talk of democracy and support of reaction. . . Appendices include important documents

"It is first of all an adventure book—Mr Snow took his life in his hands, and although he makes little of the personal aspect, like all good reporters the adventure is there between the lines. Then it is a travel book—few Europeans or Americans have visited some of the places that Mr Snow describes. . . And third, it is a vitally important historical and political volume, rich in present significance and even more wealthy for future reference." Boston Transcript

"Prince Orizu of the reigning house of Knewi—one of the strongest and most advanced kingdoms in Nigeria—sets forth plainly the many problems that will stem from Africa when this war is over. The book is far more than another study of particular postwar problems. An African here traces the history of the continent, analyzes its ethical and religious traditions, and sets forth its philosophy." School & society

Prescott used a wealth of manuscript sources, but did not sufficiently discriminate between the violently partisan accounts which he found, and he exaggerated the cultural development of the Aztecs. Monograph corrections of Prescott will continue to appear as new material is found and old material more impartially sifted. To this end the publications of the Cortes Society and the introduction and illustrations in the Henderson-Joyce edition are worthy of careful consideration." Guide to hist. lit.

"The object of these volumes is to furnish a collection of sources for the study of American history. . . Few public documents are given, but rather extracts from diaries and contemporary narratives. . . The selections will be of great service in furnishing illustrative material for teachers or for students who are reading modern authors. Each selection is preceded by a very short statement concerning the life of the author." Larned's Literature of American history

1 France—Colonies 2 Great Britain—Colonies 3 Spain—Colonies 4 U.S.—History—Colonial period 29-8364

Presents the subject from the standpoint of North America as a whole. Pays special attention to the colonies of nations other than England and to English colonies other than the 13 which revolted. The book is divided into three main parts—the founding of the colonies, expansion and international conflict, and the revolt of the English colonies. Condensed from Preface Readings at end of each chapter

1 Canada—History—To 1763 (New France) 2 U.S.—History—Colonial period 2-22288

An account of the development of Canada and the struggle between the French and the English for its possession. Deals largely with military matters

Old Virginia and her neighbors. Houghton 1897 2v maps ea $3 973.2

1 U.S.—History—Colonial period 2 Virginia—History Rc-2782

These two volumes come between his "Discovery of America" and "Beginnings of New England." Their "aim is to follow the main stream of causation from the time of Raleigh to the time of Dinwiddie, from its sources down to its absorption into a mightier stream." They cover the history of Virginia, Maryland, Carolina and Georgia from the first settlements to 1753. Not a critical study, but distinguished for its style

1 U.S.—History—Colonial period 29-5418

This replaces the earlier volume by R. G. Thwaites, "The colonies 1492-1750" published 1890

"Jernegan's masterly analysis, formidably buttressed with bibliographies, differs radically from its predecessor in many respects. . . The earlier volume disposes of the first half of the eighteenth century in a single chapter; its successor devotes no fewer than six chapters, about 200 pages, to the same period. But even more illuminating is the shift in emphasis from the chronicle of colonization and of political and constitutional development to that of

"The 'critical period' is the period from 1783 to 1789. The work thus follows, in point of time, the same author's 'American Revolution.' The state of the country at the close of the war with Great Britain, the development of the states and the westward expansion, the imperfect working and gradual breakdown of the Articles of Confederation, and the formation and adoption of the Constitution are the topics treated. The work has the clearness and literary grace which characterize all the author's writings." Larned's Literature of American history

1 U.S.—History—1815-1861 35-5282
This unfinished work, upon which Professor Turner was engaged for fifteen years before his death, is a detailed study of the social, economic, geographic and political conditions of six geographic sections of the United States, and of the administrations of Jackson, Van Buren, Tyler and Polk
"This volume remains as a rich body of reference, a guide, a pace-maker. By his fresh syntheses of complex sectional materials Turner has proved the validity of the sectional approach." Nation

Mr. Adams traces from the beginning the rise of this conflict, sketches in the general background of the sections in the period from 1820 to 1860 and outlines the sequence of events that led to the tragedy of the Civil war. Colonel Blackford served in practically all of the major battles in which Jeb Stuart and his cavalry took part, and his account of the campaigns, written while they were still fresh in his mind, gives a highly individual, revealing, and down-to-earth picture of soldiering from 1861 to 1865." A "study of the politics and personalities which bedeviled the Lincoln administration. It starts with an analysis of the political set-up at the Chicago Convention, which, half-heartedly, nominated Lincoln, and a look at the political and personal backgrounds of the men angling for positions in the government. The author then traces the successive political crises and actions of the Lincoln administration, with emphasis on the men of the war cabinet." Kirkus

1 U.S.—Description and travel 2 U.S.—Politics and government—1898- 3 U.S.—Social conditions (W) 48-6927

Early in 1947 the author, a former governor of Georgia, set out on a speaking trip that carried him into all sections of the country. He found that people "differed very little in their thinking. They wanted a program of liberty and progress for our country. They wanted our country to be united, and the sectional barriers eliminated, and an equal opportunity for every citizen." Author

The book falls naturally into two main sections: the one political and economic, the other social and cultural. Beginning with Coolidge and the great boom, Hoover's election, the great collapse, the mobilization of government, Roosevelt's rise to power, etc., it continues to the autumn of 1938. The later chapters discuss labor, science, the arts, etc.

"The Beards have always been interested in social and intellectual history, and the presentation of sources of entertainment, literature, the arts and sciences, social and philosophical thought, is the most ambitious that has yet been attempted for this last decade. Nowhere in our literature can be found a more intelligent analysis of the role of the motion picture, the radio, the popular magazines in our social dynamics, but the interpretation of literature and the arts is less successful." "Professor Faulkner has given a well-balanced treatment to his story of America in the years before the World War. Although it is a period of controversy, he has preserved an objectivity which might well be the historian's ideal; perhaps this very virtue is responsible for the absence of the color one would expect in any history of the period which held men like Roosevelt, La Follette and Wilson. Professor Faulkner's is a valuable contribution to American social history." Current history

This volume offers a "perspective in the history of these lakes, and their valley, and gives a graphic picture of this region's story. The sweep of exploration, the sweep of war as Indian, French, English and American battled for possession—the termination of hostilities with the decisive battle of Lake Champlain. The transition from wilderness to settlements, industry, production, the importance of steamboats, of the smuggler's route from early times to present, of fish, of vacationists [are reviewed]." The earlier edition of this book, published 1937, was concerned chiefly with the Scandinavian settlements of this region and with the lumber industry. In this edition the "river becomes the principal subject. New themes of river commerce, river settlement, and life on and beside the Mississippi currents replace the folk story of a frontier that moved westward across the great valley." Author's note
"Fine informal pioneer history and a genuine feeling for the romance and terror of one of the three great legend-laden rivers of the world." New Yorker

"Although the river flows into the Mississippi about midway between Memphis and Vicksburg it rises at the continental divide above Leadville, and all of the lusty, gusty story of gold and silver in the Colorado Rockies is in the book. Its later course, flowing out through the Royal Gorge, across the plains of Kansas, past the oil derricks of Oklahoma, through the Ozarks, and so down to its sluggish end, is almost equally picturesque although less turbulent, making this volume as a whole one of the most vivid in the River series." First published 1930. In 1947 edition "major improvements have been made. Over half of the text has been rewritten completely, and the remainder has been revised thoroughly. The organization has been altered. Certain types of material, as on the railroads, have been condensed, and others expanded. A chapter on frontier theory has been introduced. The specific movements of population have been stated more accurately. The treatment of the entire trans-Mississippi West has been changed a great deal in the light of more information. In many ways the present revision is a new book." Preface

"A textbook history which follows the course of the frontier as it was pushed westward from the Appalachian mountains to the Pacific, and finally disappeared from American life with the passing of the free land era. This is not a political history, but rather a narrative intending to show the economic and cultural significance of westward expansion." Bkl.

996.9 Hawaiian Islands

Barber, Joseph, 1909-
Hawaii: restless rampart. Bobbs 1941 285p o.p. 1948 996.9

1 Hawaiian Islands (W) 41-51589

"An attempt to outline the scope and the direction of issues in Hawaii, showing how their interplay is affecting life there. The historical background is sketched, with an outline of the rapid development since coming under U.S. jurisdiction, and recognition of the contradictions concealed under the surface appearances. The author reveals the machinations of the Big Five, the industrial and business trust that controls sugar, pineapple, tourist, transportation and associated industries." Kirkus

"It presents not the 'Paradise of the Pacific' of tourists but rather the real everyday Hawaii with its baffling problems. In addition to being a competent journalist, the author is a serious student of sociology and economics as well as a gifted amateur in military matters. He searches far below the surface and brings a keen analytical mind to bear upon what he finds." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Author, Title, Subject and Analytical Index

Author, Title, Subject and Analytical Index

This index to the books in the classified part includes author, title, subject and analytical entries, arranged in one alphabet.

References in the index are to class number, not to pages in this Catalog. These numbers are given in boldfaced type.

General subjects are indicated by classification number only. The individual books on that subject are not listed there unless they are classified in another class, i.e.

Aeronautics 629.13

Subdivisions of a subject are indicated by an indention under the subject, i.e.

Aeronautics 629.13
safety measures 629.1325

Another title by the same author is introduced by a dash (—) instead of repeating the name, i.e.

Adams, Henry. Formative years 973.4
—Henry Adams and his friends 92

Analytical entries are introduced by the word In. These give (1) the page numbers in the book where the material is to be found unless the material is widely scattered thruout the book; (2) the class number of the book.

Title entries are given for each book unless the title of the book and its subject heading are identical.
